BEAUTY OF BACON'S YOUTH .- Ueder this head C 1GAESthe subjoiced extract is making the circuit of the press. Not loeg ago, we remember, it was accouncy entered upon the task of reversing the world's Store and for said by ed that a writer in the London Atherenm had soberadgment of Bacon's moral oberacter, as that judgnent is rordered in Pope's famous lire, and that the first installment of the effort had actually appeared. Surely this must be a part of it: peared. Surely this must be a part of it:

He wen love and deserved to win love; for even in the dush of his life be had none of the vices of young men. If week on the score of dress and pomp; if he deated, like a child, on flowers, on seents, on gay colors, on the trappings of a horse; he neither drank nor gamed, nor ran with and loose in love. Though armed with the most wiening ways, and the most glezing lip in London, no bueband's peace was ever hurt by him, no woman's fame was dragged by him isto the mire. He sought no victories, like those of Blount. He brought no since it, the Releigh, to the cheek of one who loved him more than her own good name. No Lady Rich, as in Sidnsy's case, ever

Blushed when he was named.

His life was as pure as that of Milton, or that of Pascal, though, unlike the pensees, he lived in a court where gallantry was in vogue and beauty was bought and sold. How the pensees in then, with all these claims on love and help, did be not win his way to place? He sought it; never man with more baste and zeal, for his brain beat with victorious consciousness of power; he hungered to rule mankind, and his blood had that fiery strength which glows into white heat at an opposing blast. This question must be tried. Why, while men with far lower claims than his get posts and honors—solicitorships, judgeships, secretaryships, embassies—did this man come to pass the ripe age of forty-six without gnining power or place? Can it have been because he was service and corrupt? If so, logic is a lie, moral theorie with the ripe age of posts and posts are posts and shem.

CHEAP AND SAFE INSURANCE -We commen the following from the New York Courier and Enqurier in regard to the Washington Insurance ompany of New York city, of which our old and esteeni d friends W. S. Vetnon & Sons are the agente ie cur city. Sea their cird la arother column: Fire Insurance Profits.—Saveral of our prominest Fire Offices have adopted the principle of fintual creturn profits—such profits to accumulate as canita. This plan has worked well for marine business and will no deabt be found to be pretiable to others. We call attention to the Caid of the Washington. We call attention to the Unit of the Washingto Fire Insurance Componing our edvarising column abowing that this Company, which is well know for its promotness and liberality, has increased it Copied to $100,000, and has adopted the principal of the Continental I surance Company, viz.
allow the insured to participate in the prefix to the ex ent of 75 per cent, which is held as reserve for and scrip bearing interest in i sued therefor. O mercantile public should see that the adoption this principle will render much greater secori-than heratofote to the insured, and they can we afford to pay a fair remunerative rate when the receive three quarters of the net profits returned to them. Under the former system the Incurance Companies observed high pieces and disbursed large profits to their shareholders, but were not compelled m the any reserve fund beyond the mere amo coun of the insured, making this a rapidly see
